CAP AND GOWN

The University Of The South

1982, Volume 84

PREFACE

Sewanee, despite its frequent characterization, is not a surrealistic haven for spoiled rich kids, nor is it becoming one. It is, instead, a unique spot to which come people of all ages. They are rich and poor, young and old, black and white, united in a search for knowledge. Despite the diversity of their interests, backgrounds, and demands, as they settle in they become united by a spirit that transcends the Honor Code, the gowns, the surroundings and the fog. It is this spirit which makes Sewanee special.

When the University of the South was founded 125 years ago, it was born of a vision of a man who wished to create an environment that would serve both the spiritual and educational needs of students. His drive and dedication kept the idea alive in the face of impossible odds. Since that time, others have maintained that "Heavenly Vision". Today it demands new goals from those involved in the University. Change is constantly occurring, yet the same spirit that has sustained Sewanee for so many years has given it a quiet air of stability and a sense of permanence.

The spirit can best be explained as a feeling of love, unity, and respect for one another, for the Domain, and for the God that guides and protects us all. It is that which makes this place a special home for the time we are here. The spirit of Sewanee permeates everyone that passes through her gates, and everything that rests within them. It seems to be centered in All Saints' Chapel, the focal point of the campus. Just as Leonidas Polk based his vision on a religious ideal, the University today begins at All Saints' and branches out into academic and social diversity. With so solid a foundation, the future of the University of the South is assured.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

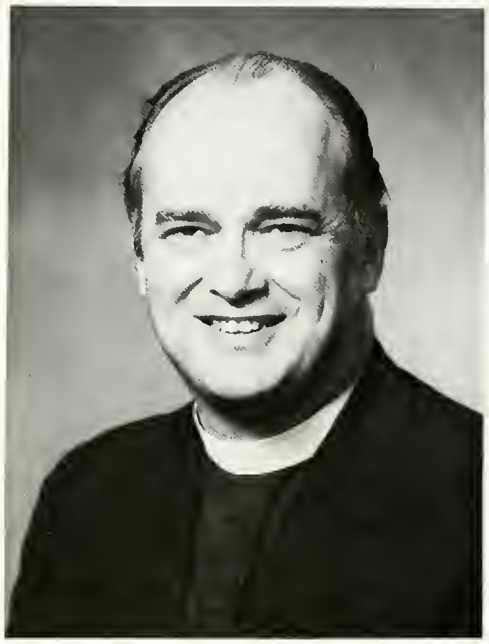
For his service, dedication, and contributions to the University of the South and its "Heavenly Vision," the editors and staff wish to dedicate the 1982 Cap and Gown to the former Dean of the School of Theology,

The Very Reverend Urban Tigner Holmes, III.



The Very Reverend Urban T. Holmes, III
1930-1981

On the Feast of the Transfiguration, 1981, following an extended period of study and writing at Kanuga and in England, the Very Reverend Urban T. Holmes, III, ninth Dean of the School of Theology, died suddenly in Atlanta, Georgia. In every way he was larger than life and he had become the intellectual leader of the Episcopal Church. He had served in his ministry for ten years as Episcopal Chaplain to Louisiana State University, and for seven years he was Professor of Pastoral Theology at Nashotah House. As Dean of the School of Theology here at the University, Terry Holmes built an international reputation as a prolific writer and scholar in the fields of history, spiritual theology, pastoral theology, and theological reflection.

Of Dr. Holmes, his fellow dean the Very Reverend Dr. O.C. Edwards of Seabury-Western Seminary has written: "he had a capacity for friendship that was extraordinary, both for its intimacy with a few and for its availability to incredibly large numbers of people ... He did more in fifty years than most people could have done in a hundred. We shall not look upon his like again this side of the apocalyptic event."

To his students at the School of Theology Dean Holmes wrote: "I am sure that you will find the School of Theology sometimes challenging, sometimes disappointing, and sometimes very exciting. I suspect this is the way the Church is these days." Those who knew Dean Holmes personally or through the creative genius of his writings were continually struck by his vision of the Church and of Christian ministry. His vision was prophetic in that it confronted, challenged, and pushed to the very limits one's capacity to imagine. In its prophetic sense this vision was often painful, and through it he called everyone in the Body of Christ to turn from mindlessness, sentimentality, and shallow answers to the depth and perplexity of the vision of the Kingdom. His was a call not to success in ministry but to faithfulness to the Christian vision and witness.

This edition of the Cap and Gown contains as its theme "The Heavenly Vision," and it is dedicated to the loving memory of the Very Reverend Urban Tigner Holmes, III. In keeping with this theme and with the life, ministry, and Christian witness of Terry Holmes we can think of no better summary of his life and work than the words of one of his favorite spiritual authors, Dame Julian of Norwich, who wrote that in the lovingkindness of God.

All shall be well,
And all manner of things shall be well.

Robert Dedmon and James Burns

Terry Holmes' warmth spoke to all he met.

Terry Holmes, shown here at a Maundy Thursday footwashing service, was actively involved in all facets of life at Sewanee.

Dean Holmes with other members of the School of Theology.

Holmes helped to form strong ties with the Anglican Church in Africa.

The Very Reverend Urban T. Holmes, III, affectionately known to us as Terry, served as Dean of the School of Theology for eight years. During his time with us he made important contributions to the development and refinement of the curriculum of the School of Theology. Under his leadership Sewanee developed the very successful Education for Ministry program.

Dean Holmes was a man of unquenchable thirst for knowledge. He had a compelling desire to share his understanding of God and man through his writings, preaching, and lecturing. His contributions to theological education and contemporary Christian thought extended far beyond his own denomination.

This distinguished man will be greatly missed at this University, but Sewanee is a better place because of his life spent among us.

From the Convocation Address given by Robert M. Ayres, Jr., Vice-Chancellor, September 8, 1981.

ALMA MATER, SEWANEE!

MY GLORIOUS MOTHER EVER BE!

On July 4, 1858, the Board of Trustees of the University of the South held its first meeting. It is from this date that Sewanee's anniversaries are marked. This year, 1982, marks the 125th anniversary of the founding of Sewanee.

The three principle founders of this university were clergymen as well as educators, joined by laymen and bishops of several southern dioceses. Led by Leonidas Polk, these men sought to establish a liberal arts institution in which religion and education were of equal emphasis. Religion, they believed, was a strong foundation from which to educate men.

With the laying of the cornerstone in 1860, the University of the South began to take shape. But over the next three years, Federal armies marched through the South and the beginnings at Sewanee were destroyed, even down to the cornerstone. Resolved to establish what they believed to be the ideal university in the ideal location, the founders began rebuilding. With a total enrollment of only nine students, the university opened on schedule on September 18, 1868.

Since then, the physical appearance of the campus has changed a great deal with the addition and renovation of various buildings. The atmosphere has also changed to some extent; the words of Moultrie Guerry, "Sewanee was founded to make men" now pertain also to women since the admittance of women in 1969. But the ideals of the founders have not been altered. The University of the South is still a seat of higher education whose foundation is a faith in the lasting value of religion.

The "spirit" of Sewanee has also remained stable over the years. It is doubtful that any of the members of today's faculty would challenge the appropriateness of the toast made by Reverend Dr. Shoup many years ago: "To Sewanee, where people of eminent respectibility dwell together in cheerful poverty."

Neither is the abundance of dogs on campus anything new. As early as 1872, and in accounts of years shortly following, students and faculty alike noted that "dogs were frequent visitors to the chapel." And the following tongue-in-cheek description of gownsmen in the spring written by the editor of the 1881 Cap and Gown amuses with familiarity today as it must have then: "It is a pleasant and refreshing sight to see a Gownsman in the spring of the year ... gracefully go down in the slush and mud ..."

The beauty of the University domain has remained, as Edward McCrady described it, "a princely domain of 10,000 acres ... richly endowed with virtually inexhaustible supplies of building stone, sand, clay, and timber ..." Leonidas Polk described the University land as seen from a summit as "an area with just enough undulation to make it picturesque ... From the summit the visitor is delighted with scenes of unsurpassed beauty, with points of the mountain running in fantastical shapes into the valley ..." Those sights related by Polk are of a landscape that looks much the same for today's viewer as it did for one of Polk's time.

It is significant that the University's anniversary is celebrated from the date on which the Trustees first met, rather than from the opening proper of Sewanee. It is a prevalent part of the essence of the liberal arts education that though things physical pass away, knowledge and religion endure.

The Concept Of Honor

As we celebrate our 125th anniversary, it is an ideal time for retrospective observation. One question to be asked is "What are the dominant factors that have allowed Sewanee to remain above the crowd?" There are few who will argue that of the most important factors that might be identified, none has had a greater impact than the code of honor embraced by the founding father of the University.

Today, though, we find ourselves standing on the horizon of what has come to be known as the computer age. As we begin to recognize the heretofore unforseen powers of the microchip, all of mankind is faced with the challenge of maintaining our humanity in the face of this new and powerful technology. Will human values survive or will we all become insignificant as the new wave sweeps our world?

If humanity is to flourish, there are certain values that must be nourished. One of these values is the concept of honor as exemplified by our Honor Code. Whether the setting is social or political, a spirit of mutual trust and respect must exist. A human being, an institution, or a government is no better than its word.

As we move into the future, let us all hope that we are able to preserve a tradition and a spirit that have served as a guiding light not only for the Sewanee family, but also for those who know of this university.

Although in our 125th year steps are being taken to make the honor system more humane, let that not be a signal to anyone that we expect less today of one another than we did in our past. And with this spirit of honor firmly embedded in our hearts there can be little doubt that those who follow will be forever grateful to us for remaining true to the belief that without honor, we have nothing.

Eric Benjamin

Director of Minority Affairs and Chairman of the Honor Council, 1973.

Dr. Edward McCrady expressed this idea when he said that "no interests of Man can compare with religion and learning for durability and abiding value. The University of the South represents a combination of the two, and I know of no surer foundation." Sewanee was razed to its foundations in 1863, yet it still existed as surely as it had in 1857 with the first meeting of the Boards of Trustees.

The words of Stephen Elliott seem appropriate for a closing thought on this celebration of the 125th anniversary of the University of the South. "The very highest scholarship," stated Elliott, "is never sought save by a limited number of persons ... This highest scholarship which is necessary as a standard ... is our desire to furnish." These words were the ones of Elliott's speech to potential benefactors of Sewanee, and it is thoughts like these which inspired the Board of Trustees to found this university. Echoed over the last century and a quarter, they apply today as they did then. Happy 125th, Sewanee, and may all your anniversaries see you as steadfast an institution as you are now.

THOU CANST MAKE ME WORTH THE WHILE;

OH GUIDE AND SHELTER ME

Anniversaries Remembered

Every quarter of a century the University of the South makes a special effort to commemorate its founding, celebrate its continued existence, publish historical works and look toward its future. The Semi-Centennial in 1907, the 75th in 1932, the Centennial in 1957-58, and the 125th all date from the founding in 1857.

When the University was 25 years old in 1882, its very survival was a miracle. No celebration was noted in the Proceedings of the trustees or in Fairbanks' History. The University survived the Civil War, loss of endowment, and the death of three Chancellors before it opened in 1868, but its existence was precarious through the 1870's. The outlook became more hopeful in 1879 when the Reverend Telfair Hodgson, already dean of the Seminary, became Vice-Chancellor. In the 14 years between the opening with nine students and four professors, and 1882, the College had enrolled 744 students, the Grammar School 750, and the Seminary 50. Seventy degrees had been awarded in the College, 26 each in arts/letters and in science, 7 in civil engineering, with 11 M.A.'s. The Seminary had granted one B.D. degree and two degrees of Graduate in Divinity. Building in stone had begun with Hodgson and St. Luke's Halls. Traditions still cherished had begun, including the honor code and the Order of Gownsmen.

The Semi-Centennial in 1907 was an occasion for great rejoicing. The medical school, begun in 1892, had awarded over 500 degrees, the law school (1893) nearly 40. Enrollment in the College had not increased significantly; 102 in 1882, 124 in 1907; while the Seminary enrollment had grown from 19 to 31. Thompson, Walsh, Convocation and Quintard Halls and Breslin Tower were in use. All Saints' Chapel was under construction. St. Luke's Chapel was completed that year. The Sewanee Review was in its 15th year. The Commencement Week celebration included a service at the Cornerstone site in Louisiana Circle and a procession exceeding "in grandeur anything ever seen at Sewanee." One of 18 honorary degrees went to

Dean Laura Drake Gill of Barnard College, whose efforts to found a women's college a few years later would not succeed. In the Semi-Centennial volume there was no hint of the difficulties ahead: by 1909 Vice-Chancellor Benjamin Wiggins was dead, law and medical departments closed, the March-December academic calendar abandoned, and the chapel would wait for another 50 years for completion. George R. Fairbanks had completed his History of the University of the South before his death in 1906, but Arthur Howard Noll was still at work on his Alumni Directory.

The 75th Anniversary in 1932 found the University having survived World War I and the earlier part of the Great Depression. An expansion of dormitories had brought most students from private homes into college housing, with the erection of Cannon, Johnson, Elliott, Tuckaway and a new Hoffman. Carnegie had been the only substantial addition to academic buildings. Thomas Frank Gailor made the historical address at the 75th Anniversary observance. As Chaplain, Vice-Chancellor and Chancellor he had lived through most of Sewanee's history as an operating institution. Moultri Guerry published Men who Made Sewanee, and four ladies collected material for the book now called Purple Sewanee, priceless in its firstperson accounts.

The Centennial began July 4, 1957, with a return to Lookout Mountain with the flagstaff carried there 100 years before. The House of Bishops met in All Saints' before it was closed for addition of tower and carillon, narthex, and St. Augustine's Chapel's wing. Bishop Frank A. Juhan portrayed Bishop Leonidas Polk in the Centennial pageant on Hardee Field, produced by Miss Charlotte Gailor. The Centennial closed with a service in Lambeth Palace Chapel, London, for the award of an honorary degree to the Archbishop of Canterbury. Building on a decade of stabilization of the University by Vice-Chancellor Alex Guerry, in spite of World War II, the University was in the midst of its greatest period of physical expansion. In the Vice-Chancellorship of Edward McGrady were built Hunter, Juhan, Benedict, Gorgas, Cravens, Hamilton, Woods, duPont, both Clevelands, and Courts and Trezevant, situated to be the site of a second college. Walsh and St. Luke's were rebuilt, and the lakes constructed. Centennial publications included as Alumni Directory, Registrar's Report, and Reconstruction at Sewanee, a history from 1857 to 1872.

The 125th Anniversary finds significant changes: admission of women, 1969, the Academy merged with St. Andrew's School and moved off the Domain, 1981, an off-campus extension, Education for Ministry, and the Century II fund, five times larger than any fund raising goal undertaken. The 125th observance began with the opening of the Easter Semester 1982 and continues throughout the calendar year with a reflective theme, "Towards a New Vision of Liberal Education in a Christian Context," and a distinctly academic flavor of faculty symposia, lectures and seminars.

Will Sewanee ever be the University of the South? Not yet, but as William Porcher DuBose said at the Semi-Centennial: "Sewanee is ever to herself and to her own the great university, not of the actual visible to others, but of the conception and the idea which is her own real." It is this spirit that Sewanee must not lose as it goes forward toward the Sesquicentennial in 2007.

"The Heavenly Vision"

The theme of this yearbook is "the Heavenly Vision." It is taken from Paul's words to King Agrippa, "I did not disobey the heavenly vision" (Acts 29:19). The question that the University of the South must ask itself again and again is, "Have we been obedient to the 'heavenly vision' which was given to the founders of this place?" To answer that question, we must first find the answer to another question: "What was the original vision of this University?"

When Leonidas Polk spoke of the university he envisioned, he said it would embody "the cultivation of true religion, learning, and virtue, that thereby God may be glorified and the happiness of man may be advanced." The church was to be at the center of the life of the University, and in fact, was not only the mother of the place in the sense of bringing it forth, but of being the perpetual source of direction and nurture. The University of the South is in a situation which is extraordinary if not unique. If she obeys her "heavenly vision" she will be neither too secular to enter into a genuine dialogue with the new religious enthusiasm which is a fact in the United States today, nor too narrow to be a genuine place of liberal education in the true sense of those words.

The truth is that all human institutions have a tendency to fall short of the visions which were their foundation. Sewanee is no exception. A remarkable thing takes place in the life of any institution when individuals commit themselves to recalling that institution to its foundation. The editors of this book have nothing less in mind. They are saying without apology that this institution was founded not only on Christian values, but on faith in the truth of the Christian Gospel which proclaims "Jesus Christ is Lord." This is not say that any doctrinal statement should be exacted from those who choose to be a part of this venture. It is rather to remind us of our heritage and to point us toward a future based on an honest understanding of that heritage. The extraordinary opportunity which Sewanee has before it is to be a university which does not say to secular and sectarian institutions, "A plague on both your houses," but, "Come and I will show you a better way."

William Porcher Dubose exaggerated perhaps only a little when he wrote that Sewanee was differentiated "from all other places and institutions" by "the value and claim of culture for culture's sake . . . The tendency to rule out as useless everything that cannot be turned to immediate practical account will inevitably for a long time affect the aims and ideals of educational institutions. Sewanee will never compete successfully in turning out the ready-made supply to such popular demands, in furnishing mechanical, industrial, educational or other experts for the various businesses waiting to employ them. But Sewanee will more and more have a mission all her own, and will not be lacking in a constituency of her own, if she will prepare those who desire to be educated not for labor but for life." Life, of course, as Dubose understands it, was the abundant life which was intended by God and included, not on the periphery but at the heart, the presence of Christ.

There is a saying which perhaps says most clearly what is needed now and will always be needed to alert the memory and strengthen the resolve of those who love a place like Sewanee. That saying is "It is not surprising that when we forget who we are, we forget how to act." This yearbook may serve to recall to us at least who we were meant to be, and by God's grace, we may remember how to act.

THE FESTIVAL OF

LESSONS AND CAROLS

From informal discussion to local chapters of world-wide organizations, Otey Parish and its All Saints' Chapel sponsor a broad range of committees, groups, and organizations. Some of these are aimed at personal growth, while others function in a community service or evangelical capacity. Such a wide spectrum of activities offers everyone in the Sewanee community an opportunity for spiritual fulfillment.

Layreaders read lessons and lead intercessions at services.

Acolytes assist the clergy at Holy Communion.

Sacristans are responsible for the sacred vestments and utensils.

St. Augustine's Guild are those who prepare the Chapel for worship by polishing brass and silver, caring for the altar linen, and arranging flowers.

Chapel Guides give guided tours through the Chapel on Sunday afternoons and at other appointed times.

The University of the South

Sewanee, Tennessee

125th ANNIVERSARY

At the backs of some people's minds this year, there has been the question of whether there may be a disproportionate amount of celebrating going on for a university that has only been around for 125 years. Other universities, such as Oxford, are now celebrating several centuries of existance. There is not even a name for an anniversary of 125 years. Furtherfore, what is it that singles out this 125th anniversary for celebration?

While colleges and universities all over the country are closing due to inflation-swollen expenses and rising operation costs, it is encouraging that the University of the South is thriving to celebrate, and perhaps thriving in celebration of, its 125th year. Taken alone, the fact that Sewanee is still around in such economically constricted times is reason enough to celebrate. Another reason for celebration is that through decades of radical, and often not very beneficial, changes in educational systems, Sewanee has remained true to the aims of its founders.

The general theme of the observance of our 125th anniversary is "Towards a New Vision of Liberal Education in a Christian Context." This theme relates that now, after the passage of 125 years, it is time to evaluate the aims of the founders of this university and send them in a fresh direction if necessary. Their vision for the education to be provided by this university was one of liberal arts in a christian context. Today's vision is the same though society has changed, and though they are never obsolete, it is time to update the liberal arts.

Language, in its broadest sense, is the foundation of the liberal arts. Accordingly, the observances of Sewanee's anniversary have been symposia which are described in the program as "exchange(s) of ideas with reference to the topic of language and the ways in which the current discussions about language are generating new directions for scholarly understanding." A profound and impressive birthday party, indeed.

In keeping with the general posture of the liberal arts, the celebration has been an eloquent and understated one. No parades or fireworks, but intelligent and thoughtful celebrations marking 125 prosperous years.

Successful and prudent celebrations acknowledge not only the past, but the future, and the hope for continued progress and future celebrations. The observance of Sewanee's 125th anniversary is such an event, honoring the past and exploring the future.

They are visible all over campus, walking in pairs, conversing, or alone, their heads bent in thought. You listen to them lecture in class, pacing the floor, scribbling on the board, or flourishing a pointer. Students wait outside their doors in the afternoons and they patiently answer questions, listen to problems, advise, and instruct. Being a professor at Sewanee is a job that requires much more than a mastery of one's particular subject matter. Teachers here make an effort to be available to their students, and students rarely hesitate to go to their professors when they need help or advice, or just to talk.

Outstanding teacher/student relationships are nothing new. From the beginning of this university, students' memoirs and letters home have discussed the accessibility of professors and their willingness to see students out of class. Newcomers are often pleasantly surprised to discover that the men and women they know as brilliant scholars and astute lecturers are so affable and so eager to help.

Though not unique to Sewanee, close faculty/student rapport is not often found at other universities. This rapport is made possible in part by Sewanee's limited enrollment, but mostly it is the product of desire on the parts of the professors to get to know their students and to enrich their academic experience. It is the uniqueness of this relationship that is part of what students, teachers, and alumni have for years called "the Sewanee experience."

The thrill of victory ...

COMPS!

"Let me check my SPO ... Don't forget your angel ... I got my gown! ... " The unique Sewanee vocabulary learned by all of us includes one key term capable of arousing instant fear and trepidation: "COMPS." They always seem so far away, forever looming in Sewanee's foggy distance.

Semesters pass and we become engulfed in "the Sewanee experience." After choosing a major, the term "Comps" gets tossed around even more often by fearless sophomores, much to the dismay of anticipatory juniors and nervous seniors. "Comps", however, is a word that no one ever can really get comfortable with, because those who have endured them seem purposefully vague about what Comps are like. No one ever knows exactly how hard Comps are, how much studying they really require, or how long one should go into seclusion to prepare for them. Of course, every senior plans to begin studying for Comps months in advance, but then, we all know "the best laid plans of mice and men ... "

Comps cast their gloomy shadow over the senior, growing ever darker as the appointed rendezvous with destiny approaches. But we are more confident than ever, not humbled by the thought that graduation rests upon passing them. We tell ourselves (and each other) that surely we've learned something in four years, so passing Comps can't be that hard ... can it? Considering some of the characters who have gone before us and still managed to reach the promised land, what do we have to worry about? As the eleventh hour approaches, one's confidence often gets lost in the shuffle.

With Comps only a week away, there is no worse feeling than staring at those old Comp questions and have absolutely no idea how you are going to answer them when your turn comes. It is a feeling of incompetence and frustration, countered by the thought that before long it will all be over. Comping seniors roam the campus in packs threatening the safety of anyone foolish enough to cross their path. On the other hand, "comping senior" becomes a magical term earning the individual much-needed privileges and attention. Beneath the anxiety, though, lies a growing realization that one's major and course of study as a whole is finally beginning to fit together and make sense. The various classes begin to mesh as one, forming a comprehensive picture of what it is you've been learning for four years.

Comps may be best compared to a roller coaster ride. Once you get on, there's nothing you can do about it. The ride is fast and full of drops, slow climbs, and unexpected turns. And then, just as suddenly as it began, it's over. You're left disoriented and confused in a world whizzing by, unaffected by Comp hysteria. Now you have to be deprogrammed, so that you may reenter normal student life as a fairly well adjusted individual and make some kind of contribution to this pre-comp society.

Comprehensive exams are a major hurdle at Sewanee; better yet, they are a right of passage not unlike turning sixteen or graduating from high school. They signify a promotion from student to "educated adult." They are a source of fear and frustration, of a sense of pride and accomplishment. The diploma lets the world know that we are educated. Passing Comps proves to us that we are educated.

The purpose of ODK is threefold: first, to recognize those who have attained a high standard of efficiency in collegiate activities and to inspire others to strive for conspicuous attainments along similar lines; second, to bring together the most representative students in all phases of collegiate life and thus to create an organization which will help to mould the sentiment of the institution on questions of local and intercollegiate interest; third, to bring together members of the faculty and student body of the institution on a basis of mutual interest and understanding.

ODK recognizes and encourages achievement in scholarship; athletics; social service, religious activities, and campus government; journalism, speech, and the mass media; creative and performing arts.

ORDER OF GOWNSMEN

Daniel Johnson, President
Anne Freels, Secretary

The Order of Gownsmen is made up of students who have achieved the required grade-point average and are entitled to wear the academic gown. The Order advises the Student Assembly and strives to maintain and promote the spirit, tradition, and ideals of the University.

The members of the Order of Gownsmen are indicated in the Classes Section by the letters "OG" following their home states.

The aim of the Blue Key Society is to provide the University with a service organization which provides assistance in various campus projects. Despite some initial organizational problems, the Blue Key was able to assist in such projects as the Blood Drives and the Homecoming Queen selection and procession. In retrospect, it seems that this organization should be put to even greater use in future years.

IN MEMORIAM

The Seminary Community does not escape its share of sorrow. Gary Slocombe leads the funeral procession for the Rev. John R. Wooley, husband of Sandra, a Middler seminarian. Torchbearers are Ramona Rose-Crosley and Ann Rivenback.

Frank Joseph Finamore, a Middler seminarian, died suddenly in January and the Community again felt a keen sense of loss and sadness. He is shown here with his wife, Janet.

We came from all over the nation, from Minnesota to Florida, from Colorado to Carolina. We had a sense of holiness, of being called, of mission. Yet the Bishops told us that we needed to go to a seminary in order to "test" our vocation and to deepen our faith. We were sent to be formed into effective bearers of the Word. The prospects of seminary were as bright as the fog which greeted us.

We approached the paradox of the place — we clearly saw a commitment to purpose, and yet there was also the charm of the ridiculous. How could we deal with Sewanee itself? The place was indeed faintly ridiculous. Stone buildings rose up in silent splendor in the midst of the counties of poverty. Locked in the past, yet immersed in the trendy present, Sewanee itself was a paradox.

But in this time of testing and formation, we found that we were becoming a part of that paradox; we ourselves were becoming ridiculous. We were beginning to grow to stand like those old buildings — attesting to the power of our past and our tradition to become a source of vitality for our changing church.

The stone edifices are monuments to the discipline of building one stone on top of another. Seminary life is an invitation to embark on such a discipline — a discipline of our time, of worship, of study, of material resources, and of our will. We are learning to befriend the tradition so that it becomes not something outside ourselves, but a part of our very being.

We are being molded. We are being invited to be ourselves in the midst of this life of paradox, and to love its ridiculousness. We are called to experience the paradox of this place, that we might be better prepared to proclaim the ultimate paradox of God as we accept our mission as God's called.

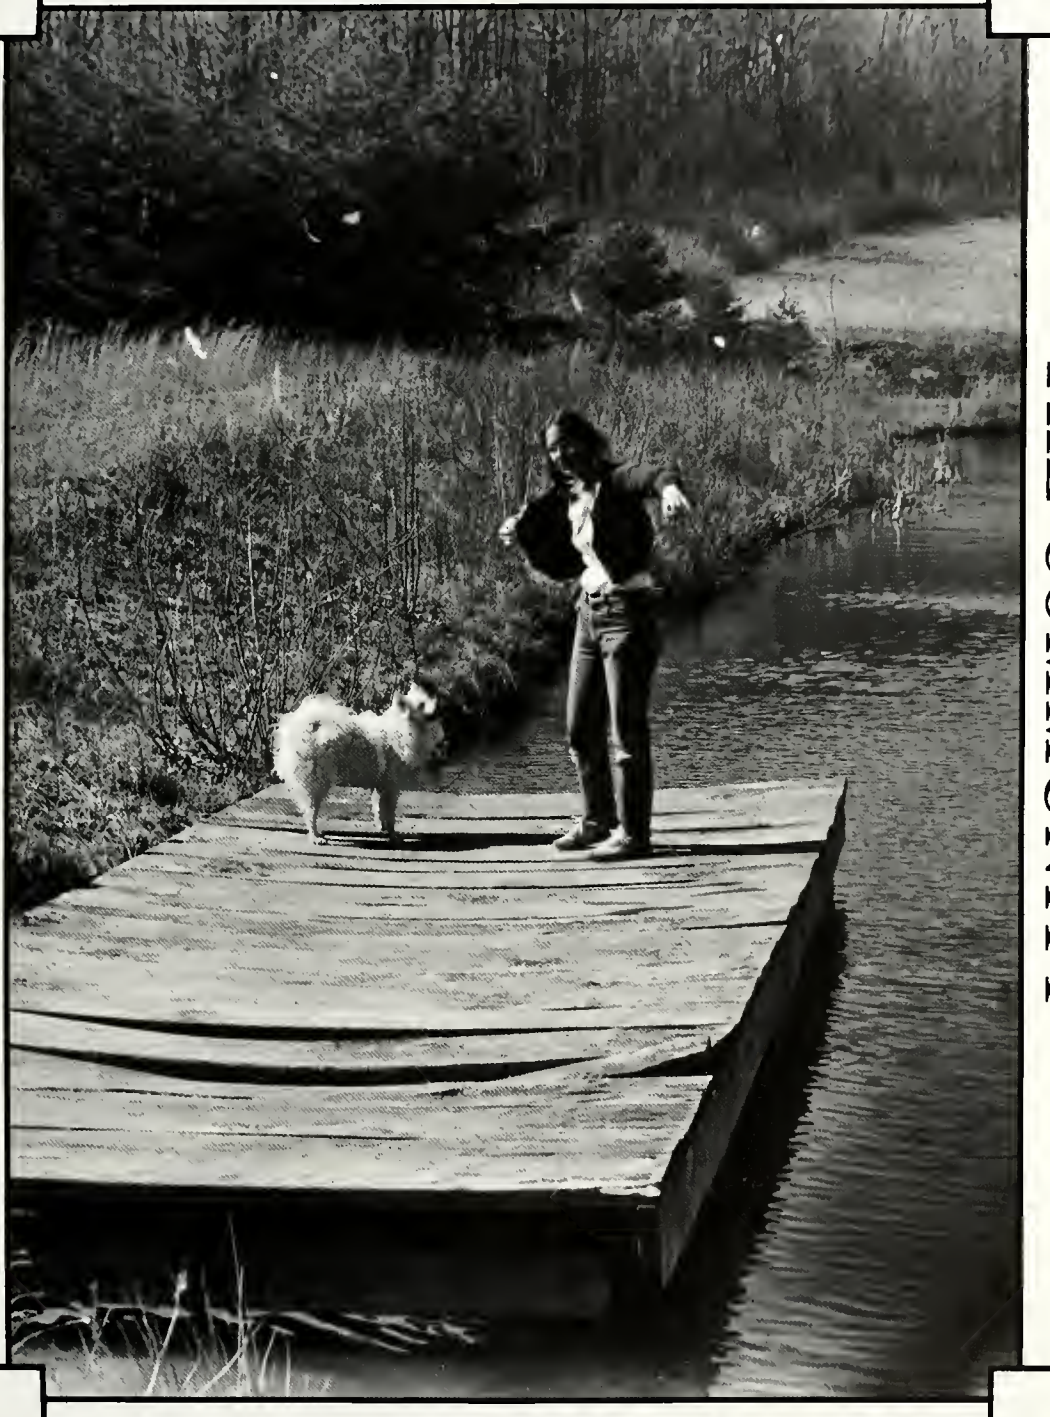
THE COMMUNITY



THE COMMUNITY

THE COMMUNITY

Dorm Life

The two most memorable images on August 26, 1981, are of my parents's car driving away and the bleak, tan walls of the dormitory in which I was to live. I never thought that such colorful life and such amazing unity could develop in a place that at first seemed so depressing and empty.

When one lives with people, one sees them alternately sparkling, enthusiastic, worried, and upset. Everyone in my dorm wanders in and out of these temperaments and by witnessing these changes and striving to recognize and understand, a unity is created between us.

William McFee once said that "it's the people who're comfortable who have time to worry over trivial things." I feel so comfortable in my dorm that my comfort has become unconcious, taken for granted. By the end of my first week my mind was free from the anxiety of living in a new place, and I could immerse myself in my studies, my sports, and my friends.

Everyone needs to have a place to come home to. If I were not so at ease in my dorm, I would be uncomfortable with college life in general. If I had no place to be myself, then I could not study effectively or be as good a friend to anyone. Home is where one should feel free to be himself. Such a freedom exists with the unity of Sewanee dorm life.

Sewanee places major emphasis upon honor. The students are expected to conduct themselves with integrity, discipline, a sense of individual responsibility, and regard for other people. Students make a commitment to these ideals by signing the Honor Code, a time-honored tradition at Sewanee. The Honor Council is responsible for maintaining this Code. It is made up of four seniors, three juniors, two sophomores, one freshman, and one student from the School of Theology, each elected by his own class. The Council, having determined by a two-thirds vote that a student has violated the Honor Code, may recommend dismissal from the University, or probation.

THE DISCIPLINE COMMITTEE

Enforcement of student regulations is entrusted to the Discipline Committee, and this Committee makes recommendations to the Deans of Students. In cases of breaches of discipline or decorum, this Committee, following a hearing with the student involved, has the power to recommend a reprimand, social probation, or suspension. The members of the Committee are elected by their class for one or two year terms.

The Sewanee Purple is a biweekly newspaper run by the University students. Students of both the college and the seminary, faculty members, and others in the community are encouraged to contribute to this publication. The Purple strives to cover any and all events that are of concern to those at the University. The Purple also provides a forum for student opinion and debate and serves as an outlet for photographers, writers, artists, and all those interested in any aspect of newspaper production.

ALPHA TAU OMEGA

What studs!

"Fondle what?"

Alpha Tau Omega, the oldest fraternity on the mountain, began the year still boasting of the intramural championship won the previous year. Success continued as nineteen young men pledged in the fall. The annual Christmas Tea, honoring Dr. Robert W. Lundin, along with the Big Brother/Big Sister Christmas play, were the highlights in December.

Returning to a snow covered mountain, the ATO's found themselves in the thick of the IM race again. The third annual ski trip went to Atlanta instead — with absolutely no slopes in sight. With the coming of spring, the Taus sponsered a canned food drive once again. The fourth annual spring Founders Day Formal capped off the banner year for Alpha Tau Omega.

AT Zeros ... Ace Bandage ... napkin basketball ... Poochonomics ... Hey Cool ... undefeated pledge class football team ... Uncle Howie and Silver Bullets ... I got twisted ... Cato! ... Elayne Schumaker and Sallie Robinson enjoy the Barefoot Formal.

Now in its fifth year at Sewanee, Gamma Tau Upsilon is still celebrating. With fall came the annual Barefoot and Christmas formals. The spring was even busier for the GTU's, highlighted by a Party Weekend street dance with the Dekes, Lambda Chis, and Betas, another Barefoot formal, and the Eleventh Annual Sewanee Bluegrass Convention. Other projects throughout the year included two record and tape sales, a booth at the Sewanee Crafts Fair, a Halloween Spook House for the public school, and always keeping the PARTY spirit!

Barefeet and Beer ... "What time is it? What day is it?" ... Gamma Airlines "Come Fly With Us" ... "What do you mean, you don't know how to bake cookies?" ... LAMBDA CHI ALPHA

The Lambda Chi Alpha House.

Lambda Chi hour at the pub.

The Lambda Chis of Sewanee continued their tradition of community action and social activities this year with some things old and some things new. Chops this year entered the fall homecoming parade, had fun in I.M. sports, and won the annual community blood drive. The Christmas party for area foster children was a great success. In the spring, Lambda Chi brought the White Animals to Sewanee for a mid-winter bash and reinterpretted Beowulf with a meadhall party. The year was also highlighted by an excellent associate class who gave us a terrific "Arabian night."

Money on mixed drinks ... My sister knows the White Animals ... Mimi's favorite band ... Arabian Nights ... Comet John ... Pig Roast ... Yeomans sees Vandy ... Splatwood ... Edenbird ... Pissweenie ... Congratulations to an awesome Senior class: Atwood, Chapin, Elston, Buck, Giffin, Lane, Miller, Thrower, Friend, White, Hartford.

Stephanie Cole, Joan Morrow, and Cathy Garbee prepare to take up their usual tations in the library.

"Now, the ones in the stripes are refs, right?"

Carol Killebrew listens as Kristen Hutchins explains the meaning of life.

Phi Kappa Epsilon was once again blessed with an active calendar and a very successful rush. The sorority participated in both blood drives and cheerfully helped the community. Our fund raisers were successful, and our bashes were the best! With the addition of 23 pledges, our membership increased to 46. The new additions only proved to strengthen the sorority and help us to be a close group of friends. "Getting better every year!"

The Red "I" ... An Old Fashioned Christmas Formal ... awesome ... "She's a very kinky girl" ... pledge swaps ... Big Sister/Little Sister hunt ... chugging contest ... "We're red-blooded American women. We're aware of the male species." ... wake-up parties ... Cookouts in September ("Everyone is responsible for their own meat") ... SIGMA NU

SNu's David Hay and Russ Freeman with Susan Miller and Judy Dowker.

Founded in 1899, the Beta Omicron chapter of Sigma Nu represents a combination of the great traditions of the past and the dynamic capabilities of over forty men dedicated to making the world a better place to live. The year 1981-82 saw the continuing growth of the chapter with the addition of 17 new Brothers, the traditionally popular Halloween and New Wave parties, the annual Faculty Oyster Roast, and an Easter egg hunt for the benefit of community children. Snakes were active in campus and community activities and organizations, especially the Big Brother program. It was indeed a landmark year in that the chapter raised the funds necessary to renovate what is, without a doubt, the most beautiful fraternity house on campus. Best wishes are extended to our departing fellows: Brothers Liles, Terry, Shaw, Ware, Weaver, and Buckner.

ATHLETICS

ATHLETICS

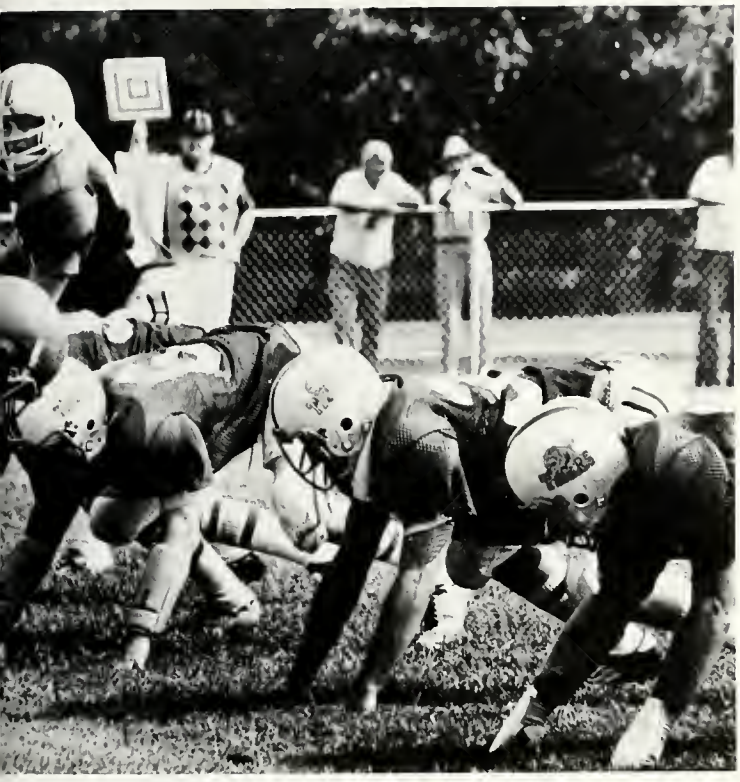
The year was 1899. "In six days, Sewanee beat Texas, Texas A&M, Tulane, and Ole Miss." The University of the South fighting purple Tigers won 12 games. Others defeated by Sewanee in 1899 were Georgia, Georgia Tech, and Tennessee. The Tigers outscored their opponents 322 to 10. It is no exaggeration to say that 1899 was an extraordinary season for the Tigers.

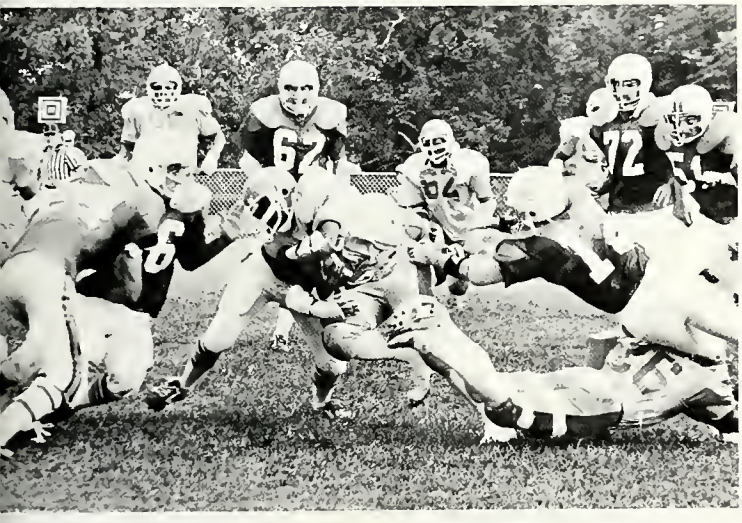
This season, 1981, marks 82 years that have passed since that memorable year. Things have sure changed since then, or have they? Most of the schools on Sewanee's 1899 schedule are no longer scheduled as opponents. In fact, these old opponents are what might be called the "big boys" of college football today, with stadiums seating in the tens of thousands, and free quality educations for those who play on their football teams. But Sewanee? Well, in all honesty, not much has changed. There are still no athletic scholarships given, still no huge crowds; Sewanee even continues to play on real grass. But none of that seems to matter. In fact, most of the football players are kind of proud of Sewanee's tendency to cling to tradition. The modern-day Sewanee football player feels as much rapture over a big victory and as much of that inexpressable sadness after a hard-fought loss as any player at any school ever did or ever will. Most importantly, the players play, not because of what they are given to do so, but because of what they give to the school, to the game, and to themselves.

In 82 years, the quality of Sewanee football has not declined; it has made steady progress. It's true that the 1981 record was 5-4, but that is only a record, and fails to take into account the heavy academic pressures placed on players as students. It seems safe to say that Sewanee has maintained its tradition on the gridiron while players have maintained their academic integrity.

Quarterback Tim Tenhet looks for an open receiver.



The Tiger defense readies itself for action.



Go for it!

Proof of Sewanee's excellence on the field lies in the fact that the Tigers set 29 overall records in 1981: 10 individual season records, 11 individual career records, six team records, and two individual game records. Eight members of the record-setting Tiger squad made All-C.A.C. Two gridders, D.J. "The Rampage" Reina and Greg "Candyman" Worsowicz carry their Sewanee tradition to medical school on NCAA post-graduate scholarships. With records like these, there shouldn't be any need for further proof of the quality of Sewanee football.

If anyone feels that Sewanee is lacking some of the old "tradition of excellence" in football, look again at these statistics. Sewanee football is getting older, but it is also getting better.

NCAA RANKS #9

The Lady Tigers field hockey team had an excellent season and ended up with a ranking of 9th in the nation in Division III of the NCAA and an overall record of 13-3-1. At mid-season they were undefeated and were ranked 4th. Their only loss in NCAA play was to Catawba College, a Division II school.

First-year coach Jill Thomas was one of the main reasons that the team's record improved so drastically over last year's. Also, several talented freshmen and a solid nucleus of returning starters gave the team strength.

Seniors Margaret Urbano and Sally McSpadden provided leaderhship of defense and offense, respectively, and will be greatly missed next year. Nine starters will return next season, including junior standouts Kate Belknap and Sarah Coke.

The season was highlighted by three victories over Vanderbilt and a 3-1 defeat of Georgia Club.

Will Reid and Bayard Leonard take the ball downfield.

Meighen, C. Miller, D. Reece, W. Reid, R. Shearer, F. Shepard, B. Smith, J. Summerville, J. Swanson, M. Waller.

Although the soccer team posted its second best record in 10 years, the season was somewhat of a disappointment. The team had much potential, but lost some very important games. The outcome was a mediocre record of 7-6-3.

"The Kid" Eddie McKeithen had another outstanding season, scoring 14 goals. Richard Garbee also had a great year; both members were selected as all-conference players along with John Hulsey and Jeff Swanson. Garbee and McKeithen also made all-TISA and for the first time ever, two Sewanee booters were selected for the all-South team.

The season did have its high points, as the booters defeated their archrival Southwestern in regular season play, with a score of 4-0. A stingy defense led by Sam Dumas, John Hulsey, and Chris Miller allowed the Tigers to post wins over other tough teams such as Bryan College, where the battle ended in a 2-1 victory. The team also acquired a dose of humility at the hands of Alabama at Huntsville. That final score was 10-0.

The game that marked the decline of the team's season was a loss to a tough Covenant team. Sewanee played their best game of the season, only to see the game stolen in the final minutes. The score was 2-0.

Pete Haley, the young, enthusiastic coach of the Tigers has great expectations for his players in the coming years. With only three seniors leaving and with caliber players like Garbee, Smith, Gould, and McKeithen still eligible for next year, the future looks very bright!

The 1981-82 season proved to be a disappointing one for the Sewanee Tigers' dual meet record. However, there were many good races and personal best swims during Cliff Afton's first year as coach. The six returning team members were joined by some talented freshmen and enthusiastic upperclassmen who returned to competitive swimming after long absences. Unfortunately, this lack of experience and the loss of most of last year's top scorers were at the root of the team's troubles.

In the conference meet, Sewanee placed fourth — a disappointing finish after last year's championship. Even so, nearly all team members improved their times in the meet. Sewanee place in eleven events, winning two. Two swimmers, Charlie Sholten and Jean Burrell, qualified for the NCAA Division III Championships in the three meter dive and the two hundred yard backstroke, respectively.

The season's meets did provide the team with crucial experience. In spite of the loss of several seniors, Coach Afton and the team look forward to a winning season next year.

Despite a very up and down season, the Lady Tigers basketball team ended the season with three consecutive final wins and an overall record of 8-14. After a mid-season slump, the Lady Tigers battled back to win several games and lose some close and exciting contests. High points of the season were wins over Emory and Henry, Fisk, and Centre. The team pulled out the Centre game with all five of the starters eventually fouling out.

Sophie Brawner led the team in both scoring and rebounding while Jetta McKenzie and Zanna Brawner followed closely. Jill Webb ran the offense for the Lady Tigers and led the team in assists. Freshmen Teddie Batchman and Suzi Friend saw lots of playing time at the center position.

The Lady Tigers hope to use the experience gained this year and some greater confidence to achieve a goal of 20 wins next season. The team is quite talented, and with a little positive thinking, next year could prove to be a very successful one.

"The Canoe Team" is a phrase that includes all interested boaters in Sewanee. The Southeastern Intercollegiate Races in the fall in North Carolina have been won by Sewanee every year but one in the past eleven years, and this enthusiasm extends to river trips all year. A yearbook is a record of the year's people, activities, and places. In order to be an accurate representation of such things, the book must have the support of those it portrays. So often, people want a yearbook delivered to them without expending anything — ideas, energy, money, time — on their part. This is painfully true at Sewanee. Everyone is given the opportunity to participate, yet few are willing.

The Cap and Gown salutes the following five Greek organizations and their members for their support of this endeavor. Your contributions are meaningful and much appreciated. Thank You!

IN MEMORIAM

Dr. Edward McCrady, the eleventh Vice-Chancellor of this University, was widely respected as a scientist and leader of the Episcopal Church. Many of us have been privileged to have been taught by Dr. McCrady, others have been stimulated by his lectures concerning science and faith. It was our privilege to learn more about the people, places, and environment of Sewanee as so interestingly understood and communicated by Dr. McCrady.

Amidst his many and varied activities he was always a teacher. He was a violinist, portrait painter, sculptor, and translator of the classics to name only a few of his interests and accomplishments. During his twenty years of service to the University as Vice-Chancellor, the size of the College of Arts and Sciences doubled and the University endowment increased ten-fold. Fifteen major buildings were constructed. Dr. McCrady drew the final plans for the completion of All Saints' Chapel, and was founder of the Sewanee Summer Music Center, which just celebrated its twenty-fifth season.

His contributions to this University and the world in which he lived will long be remembered.

Professor Abbott Martin liked to quote for his students the headline in a college newspaper which proudly announced, "Such-and-such tradition to start next Tuesday." To Mr. Martin, this statement epitomized what he called the "Yankee" notion of tradition. But while he knew his students would enjoy this anecdote, sharing for a moment his scathing superiority to such ignorance, I suspect he told it less for our amusement than our instruction. And, as I recall, our laughter was loud but distinctly uneasy: most of us knew ourselves to have been all too capable of just such a thoughtless and ignorant solecism.

The purist in matters of this kind is likely to say that opening "tradition" to discussion is tantamount to an admission of its loss or demise. But I mention a bit of lore about "Abbo" to suggest that even such a purist as Mr. Martin thought it useful to broach the subject from time to time. And perhaps more than passingly useful: for who, remembering the harrumphing and withering contempt in Abbo's voice as he quoted that absurd headline, would ever himself be guilty of such carelessness?

In pausing briefly, then, during this anniversary year to consider the College's academic traditions, what seems most worthy remarking is the continuity in them between past and present. I wonder whether, for example, the following paragraph will not have an unmistakably familiar ring to it:

"We are definitely committed at Sewanee to the College of Liberal Arts as a distinct unit in the educational system of our country, with a contribution to make that can be made by no other agency. In an age when the demand for the immediately practical is so insistent, when the integrity of the College ... is imperilled by the demands of vocational training, we adhere to the pure cultural function of the College of Liberal Arts: the training of youth in Christian virtue, in personal initiative, in aesthetic appreciation, in self-mastery, in social consciousness, in intellectual integrity, and scientific methods of inquiry. This function can best be performed in a small college through the medium of a faculty of character and distinction maintaining intimate personal contacts with a carefully selected group of students."

This statement of "educational and spiritual aims of the University" was drawn up, as it happens, by the University Senate in 1926; and not only its prevalent attitude and tone, but even a good many of its very words, are retained in the statement of "University Purpose" to be found in the current College Catalogue. It is always mildly reassuring to discover that our forbearers have confronted, and happily survived, a threat which we have identified more recently — the pressure, in this instance, to divert "the pure cultural function of the College" toward "vocational training." But the discovery becomes even more significant in the realization that this 1926 statement has its own immediate source in Newman's apology for liberal learning in The Idea of a University; and that behind Newman stands a tradition of humane cultivation of the arts and sciences that connects Sewanee to the mediaeval universities and to the writers and thinkers of Rome and Greece. It is part of our good fortune that intellectual and pedagogical ones. Though we may tend to wear gowns in our quotidian labors less by design that by custom, we might occasionally remind ourselves that they remain an outward and visible sign of our inward and philosophical bond with a European academic tradition of long standing.

What universities, like other institutions, proclaim as their ideals may, however, suffer qualification or falling-off when put into practice. And a more reliable index of what a college genuinely believes to be important are its specific requirements for degrees. In this respect, too, the remarkable about Sewanee is the high degree of continuity in curriculum and standards that has marked its progress in this century. Checking back 70 years to 1912, somewhat arbitrarily at 14-year intervals, we find very few substantive changes in fundamental expectations.

In 1968, as in 1982, Sewanee students met requirements in English and foreign languages, in mathmetics and experimental science, in history and the social sciences, and in philosophy and religion, but not in fine arts. A student in 1954 would have had virtually the same requirements; for though it was possible to obtain a degree without college mathematics, it could only be done by taking four full semesters in chemistry, physics, or biology. In 1940, a student would have had Bible as an option and his minimum in mathematics and experimental sciences would have been two courses rather than four. In the year of the statement quoted earlier, 1926, a Bachelor of Arts required Latin or Greek as well as a modern language, while a Bachelor of Science could offer two modern languages if he wished; and for both, a course in ethics was specifically set for philosophy. Even as early as 1912, the basic expectations are not startlingly different from our own: two years of Latin (or one Latin, one Greek) and two years of a modern language; two years of English, and a year each of mathematics, "pure" science, philosophy, history, and politics.

To note such continuity in academic ideals and practices is to see that Sewanee's character has been shaped gradually and organically, and that its "traditions" have not been first rashly broken and then lamely splinted and reset with every turn of educational fad or fashion. Nor are the continuities limited to what may appear in official bulletins. Sewannee's academic character includes a tradition of courtesy, an assumption that students and faculty will meet and work in a spirit of mutual respect, implicit trust, and civility. There is a tradition of students taking as exemplary models certain older students whose accomplishments they aspire to emulate or exceed, or some or other member of the faculty, whose books they may borrow and whose intellectual or personal style helps them to discover a true style of their own. Sewanee honors that pedagogical tradition which considers it at least as important to contribute to the sum of human knowers as to the sum of human knowledge. Another constant has been the tradition of intellectual integrity, and within that, of the student's being challenged to grow toward authentic intellectual independence. What I hope, of course, is that Sewanee may keep vital a sense of its own particular lineage and unique history; for though tradition is inherited and thus can never be simply declared "to start next Tuesday," it nonetheless requires for its sustenance and periodic infusions of lifeblood — as Abbo knew — a steady and unremitting vigilance.
